Success through evolution

Brian Magnum wanted something different after two attempts at college and jobs in construction and land surveying.

An advertisement for the Electrical and Electronics Technology program at South Piedmont Community College caught his eye and he enrolled. After earning his degree, he worked in the corporate offices of Dillard's for five years, followed by a year-plus with Nexcom.

Then, he created Brightflow Technologies, a one-man, computer-consulting operation. He and a business partner also started Vendetta Studios, which creates smart-phone applications and Web games. He hopes that Vendetta will eventually become his primary source of income. "The long-term goal is to make my living in gaming, wear a T-shirt and jeans to work, and do something I'm passionate about every day, because then it's not work," he said.
