Internships integrate education, career development, and public service, preparing students for future jobs in a variety of fields including environmental science, engineering, marketing, policy, and research. Interns may work on projects such as legislative affairs, GIS shoreline mapping, communications, or wildlife education.

All interns will work 40 hours per week for 10 weeks, earning a $15-per-hour stipend. The program runs from May 18 through July 24, 2026, and includes enrichment activities such as virtual seminars and executive chat sessions with state leaders.

Since its founding in 1969, the program has awarded more than 4,600 internships to North Carolina college students. It is open to all North Carolina residents enrolled in a college, university, technical institute, or community college. Internship formats may be in-person or hybrid depending on the assignment.

"Countless current and former state employees began their public service careers by working as a state government intern," said Youth Programming Manager Jean McBride. "It's a great way to gain valuable experience while forming lasting relationships."

The North Carolina Internship Council oversees application review and selection, based on academic achievement and demonstrated interest in public service. Qualified candidates will also be interviewed by potential supervisors.

Former interns share their experiences in videos and testimonials available at ncadmin.nc.gov/advocacy/youth/state-internship-program.

Wine & Dine on the Rails Returns to the N.C. Transportation Museum*An elegant evening where the train moves slowly and the wine does not

The North Carolina Transportation Museum is once again inviting guests to trade car keys for train tickets as its popular Wine & Dine on the Rails event rolls back into the station February 13 through 15. This annual favorite promises an evening of elegance, romance, and just enough motion to remind diners they are, in fact, on a train.

The evening begins with a cocktail hour before boarding, giving guests time to sip, mingle, and admire the historic surroundings before settling in for a leisurely train ride around the museum's 60-acre site. Once aboard, a three-course meal is served as the train glides along at a pace that encourages conversation, eye contact, and possibly a second glass of wine.

Each passenger receives three drink tickets good for wine or beer, redeemable either before boarding or during the ride. Additional drinks will be available for purchase, because sometimes three tickets simply feel like a warm-up lap.

Tickets are priced at $140 per person for members and $145 per person for non-members, plus tax. Private dining aboard the historic Doris rail car has already sold out, proving once again that romance and rail cars are a powerful combination. Seating is still available in other cars, though Saturday, February 14 is fully booked. Limited tickets remain for Friday, February 13 and Sunday, February 15, but they are disappearing faster than dessert at the last table.

All guests must be at least 21 years of age and present valid photo identification at check-in. Tickets may be purchased at:

nctransportationmuseum.org/wine-and-dine, procrastination is strongly discouraged.

Wine & Dine on the Rails is operated by the non-profit N.C. Transportation Museum Foundation, which hosts special events throughout the year to support museum operations. Foundation officials note that many guests attend for the dining experience and later return to explore the museum during regular hours—sometimes with fewer wine glasses involved.

College Students Can Now Apply for Summer Internships in State Government Agencies*Application deadline is January 30

College students across North Carolina can now apply for summer internship opportunities with state government agencies. Administered by the NC Department of Administration's Division for Women and Youth, the annual competitive program offers 10-week paid internships for students interested in careers in public service.

"As a former intern with the North Carolina Department of Justice, I know firsthand how much summer interns get to grow as they learn about the impact public service has on our communities," said Governor Josh Stein. "No matter which department or division our interns support, they help our government make positive change."

"The State of NC Internship Program nurtures student interest in public service while providing hands-on career development experience," said NC Department of Administration Secretary Gabriel J. Esparza. "For more than 50 years, this internship program has been a great stepping stone for students seeking state government careers."

Students can search and apply for internships by agency, location, and field of study using the online application portal. This year's program will offer 100 internships statewide, with placements ranging from Buncombe County in the mountains to Dare County at the coast. Applications are open through January 30, 2026.

Internships integrate education, career development, and public service, preparing students for future jobs in a variety of fields including environmental science, engineering, marketing, policy, and research. Interns may work on projects such as legislative affairs, GIS shoreline mapping, communications, or wildlife education.
