

Two Anson County Early College Students Accepted to North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics

This is a release from Anson County Early College: Anson County Early College is proud to announce that two of our students, Eukela Little and Ghulam Saeeda, have been accepted and will be attending North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics (NCSSM) beginning fall 2016. NCSSM challenges academically talented students with an advanced curriculum as one of the state's efforts to stay competitive in the global economy.

NCSSM has built a reputation as an academic powerhouse, educating intellectually gifted students from every corner of the state. Their students earn more National Merit scholarships than any school in the state, and they enter STEM fields - science, technology, engineering and math - at three times the national average.

Ghulam decided to apply to the School of Science and Mathematics because she felt that it was an excellent school that would challenge her academically while opening doors for her future. "The students there are great, and the environment is very motivational. Moving away from home will take a lot of getting used to, but I believe that the school community will become my second family."

Eukela Little decided to apply to the school because she felt that it was the best way to represent herself as a student while challenging herself. "Challenges are an important part of my life, and this will be my biggest challenge yet. Science and math are also my favorite subjects. I do want to thank Ms. Loftis and all of my teachers for their help through this process, and I of course want to thank my family and friends for their support. Above all, I would like to thank God for allowing me to have this experience."

Anson County Early College staff and students will certainly miss both young ladies, but we are confident they will represent Anson County well as they pursue their high school diplomas from this distinguished institution.
